Communication Studies	BA, Minor

Understanding the process of communication is no less important in today's Information Age than it was during the Golden Age of Athens, when skill in oral communication determined one's success in life.

The study of the human capacity for speech as a means of influence, entertainment, and information was at the foundation of Western Civilization. A course of study in communication, always one that required knowledge of many cognate fields such as psychology and logic, remains interdisciplinary in nature. Faculty in Communication Studies teach aesthetic, historical, critical, and empirical methods for understanding communication.

The aims of the discipline are both conceptual and practical. In broad terms, students who enroll in a liberal arts curriculum do so to develop the ability to analyze and reason critically, write and speak effectively, and appreciate the influences of culture upon their lives. The first goal of the department is to advance these objectives.

The department offers fully articulated major and minor programs. Courses focus on the history, theory and practice of human communication across personal, professional, and civic contexts. Required courses introduce students to the importance of communication in several key areas: debate, interpersonal communication, media studies, organizational communication, performance of literature, rhetoric, and small group communication. Through the use of electives, the major can be shaped to assist students in preparing for their educational and career objectives.

Students use a Communication Studies major to prepare for careers in business, advertising, public relations, human relations, law, education, the mass media, non-profit work, theatre, and the clergy. In addition to providing students with an option to select from a broad range of internships and to participate in various Learn by Doing activities, the department houses an extensive program in competitive debate. It also offers individual and sequenced courses to develop practical skills in oral composition, critical thinking, and effective human communication.

Mission Statement

The Communication Studies program at Cal Poly offers a comprehensive curriculum, focusing broadly on the composition and influence of messages across the contexts of personal, professional, and civic life. Graduates of the program gain knowledge and skills to effectively engage in and change the world around them. Students learn foundational theories and study human communication from historical, critical, humanistic, and social scientific approaches to uncover how, why, and with what effects people communicate. Upon completing this program, students possess a robust facility for creating ethical, culturally aware, and inclusive communication as citizens of a dynamically mediated world.

Undergraduate Programs BA Communication Studies

The Bachelor of Arts in Communication Studies degree prepares students for careers in the various communication professions as well as a wide variety of occupations that place a premium on excellent communication skills. In addition, many Communication Studies graduates go on to earn advanced degrees in disciplines such as communication, psychology, sociology, and law. The Communication Studies curriculum draws from the traditions of both the humanities and the social sciences and includes a wide array of courses investigating the nature, processes and effects of human communication.
